Medicare Benefit Schemes: The Enhanced Primary Care Plan, The Mental Health Care Plan and the new Helping Children with Autism Program.

Enhanced Primary Care Plan

- 5 sessions with an Allied Health Professional, (see below for a list of which professionals are Allied Health Professionals), as well as,
- $4250 worth of dental treatment if the doctor writing the referral feels that the chronic condition (autism spectrum disorder) is causing the dental problems. (Problems such as teeth grinding, eating non edible items, refusing to brush teeth etc could be attributed to the child's Autism Spectrum Disorder.) The total payment is available across two consecutive years.

People with Autism are automatically eligible for the EPC because an Autism Spectrum Disorder is a Chronic Condition.

The EPC can be written by your G.P and people with autism are eligible for 5 sessions every calendar year. Once the initial plan has been made, they will not need GPs to write new plans each year, but GPs may review the plan.

The Mental Health Care Plan is an option available for anybody (individuals with an ASD, parents, siblings, carers...) who feels that their overall wellbeing and mental health is affected. Mental illness is common; around 1 in 5 Australians will experience a mental illness at some stage in their lives. Your Mental Health can be affected by a number of things; Physical problems such as chemical imbalances in the brain and infections, as well as non physical problems such as exposure to trauma, family environments, cumulative stress and difficult life events. We know that having a child with autism can be hard. Any members of the family who are feeling sad, confused, depressed or anxious about the person in the family who has an autism spectrum disorder should see their G.P. to discuss other professionals who may be able to support them, such as social workers, counsellors.

People who have autism spectrum disorders can also have mental health difficulties. They may be anxious about the environments around them; they may be depressed because they are having difficulty forming relationships with other people. There are many reasons why they would be eligible to access the Mental Health Care Plan, and they should be encouraged to seek support from the appropriate professionals.

Group sessions can be used for Social skills groups, play therapy groups, anxiety groups; any group that is run by the above listed professionals and is working towards building the confidence, self esteem and ability of the person with an autism spectrum disorder.

People are eligible for 12 sessions under the Mental Health Care Plan every calendar year. You can get a referral from your G.P. or Paediatrician. Make sure you book a long consultation with your doctor to allow you and your doctor enough time to prepare a GP Mental Health Care Plan and discuss your treatment options. After the initial plan has been written, you do not need a new plan each year, but the doctor may review the plan. The doctor may also refer you for 6 sessions initially then review the plan.
